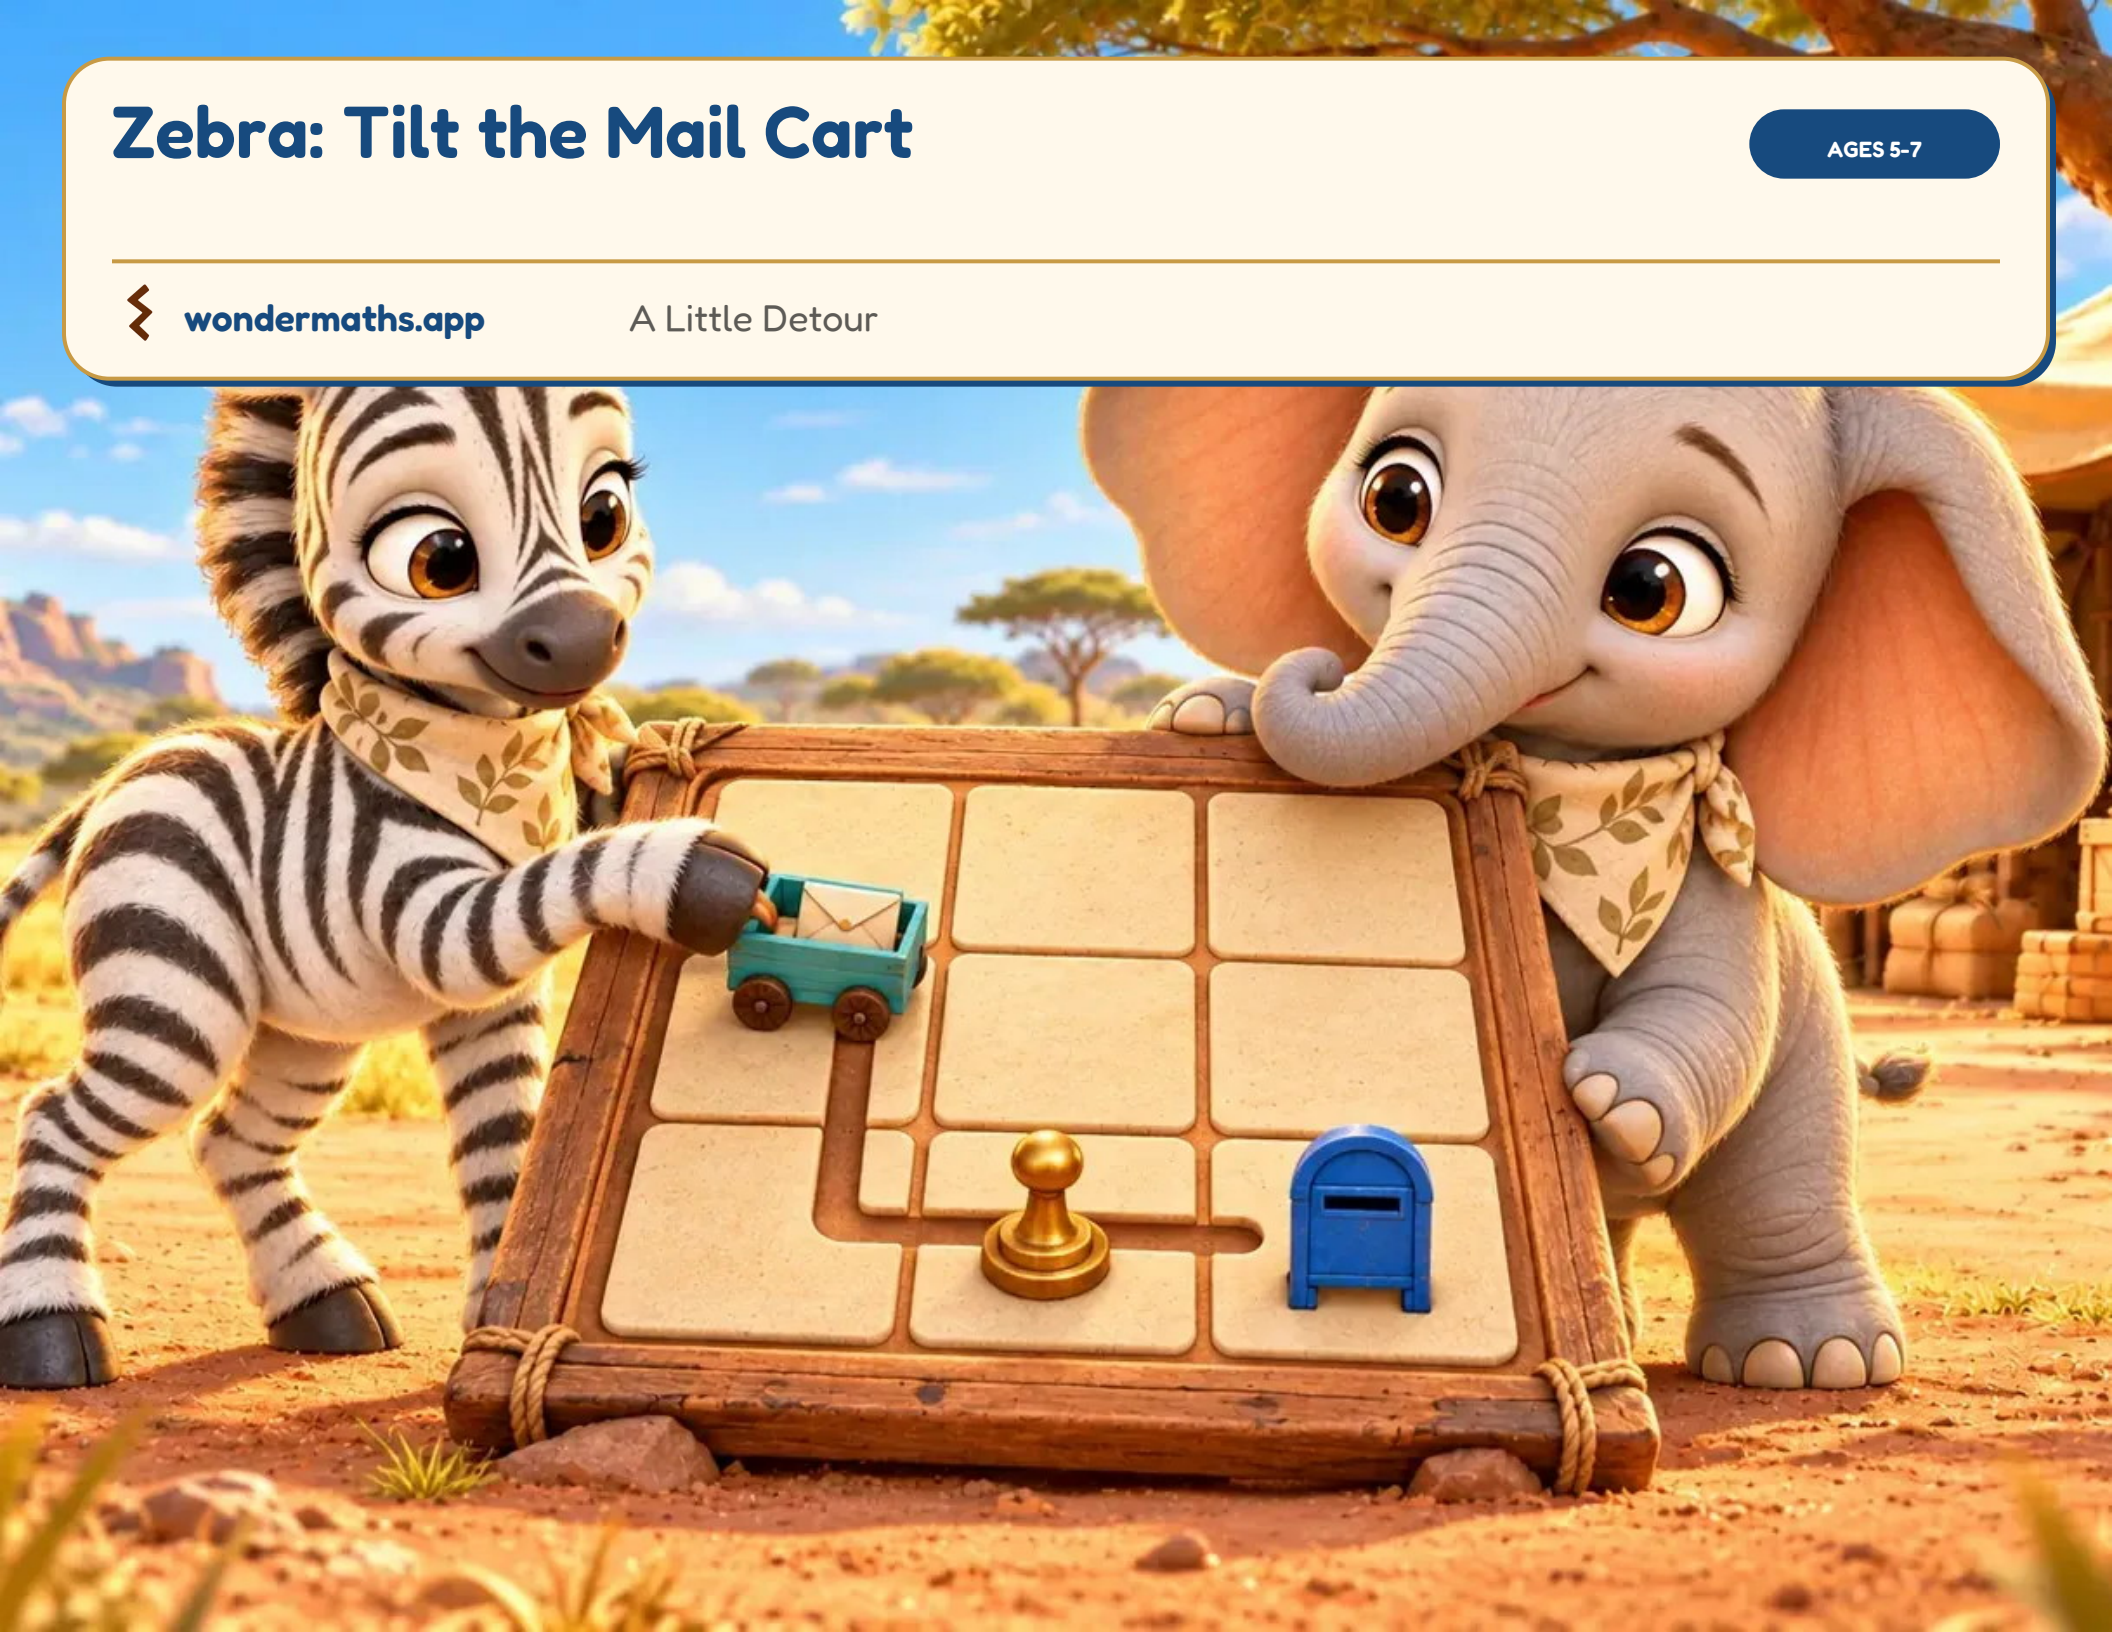
A Little Detour



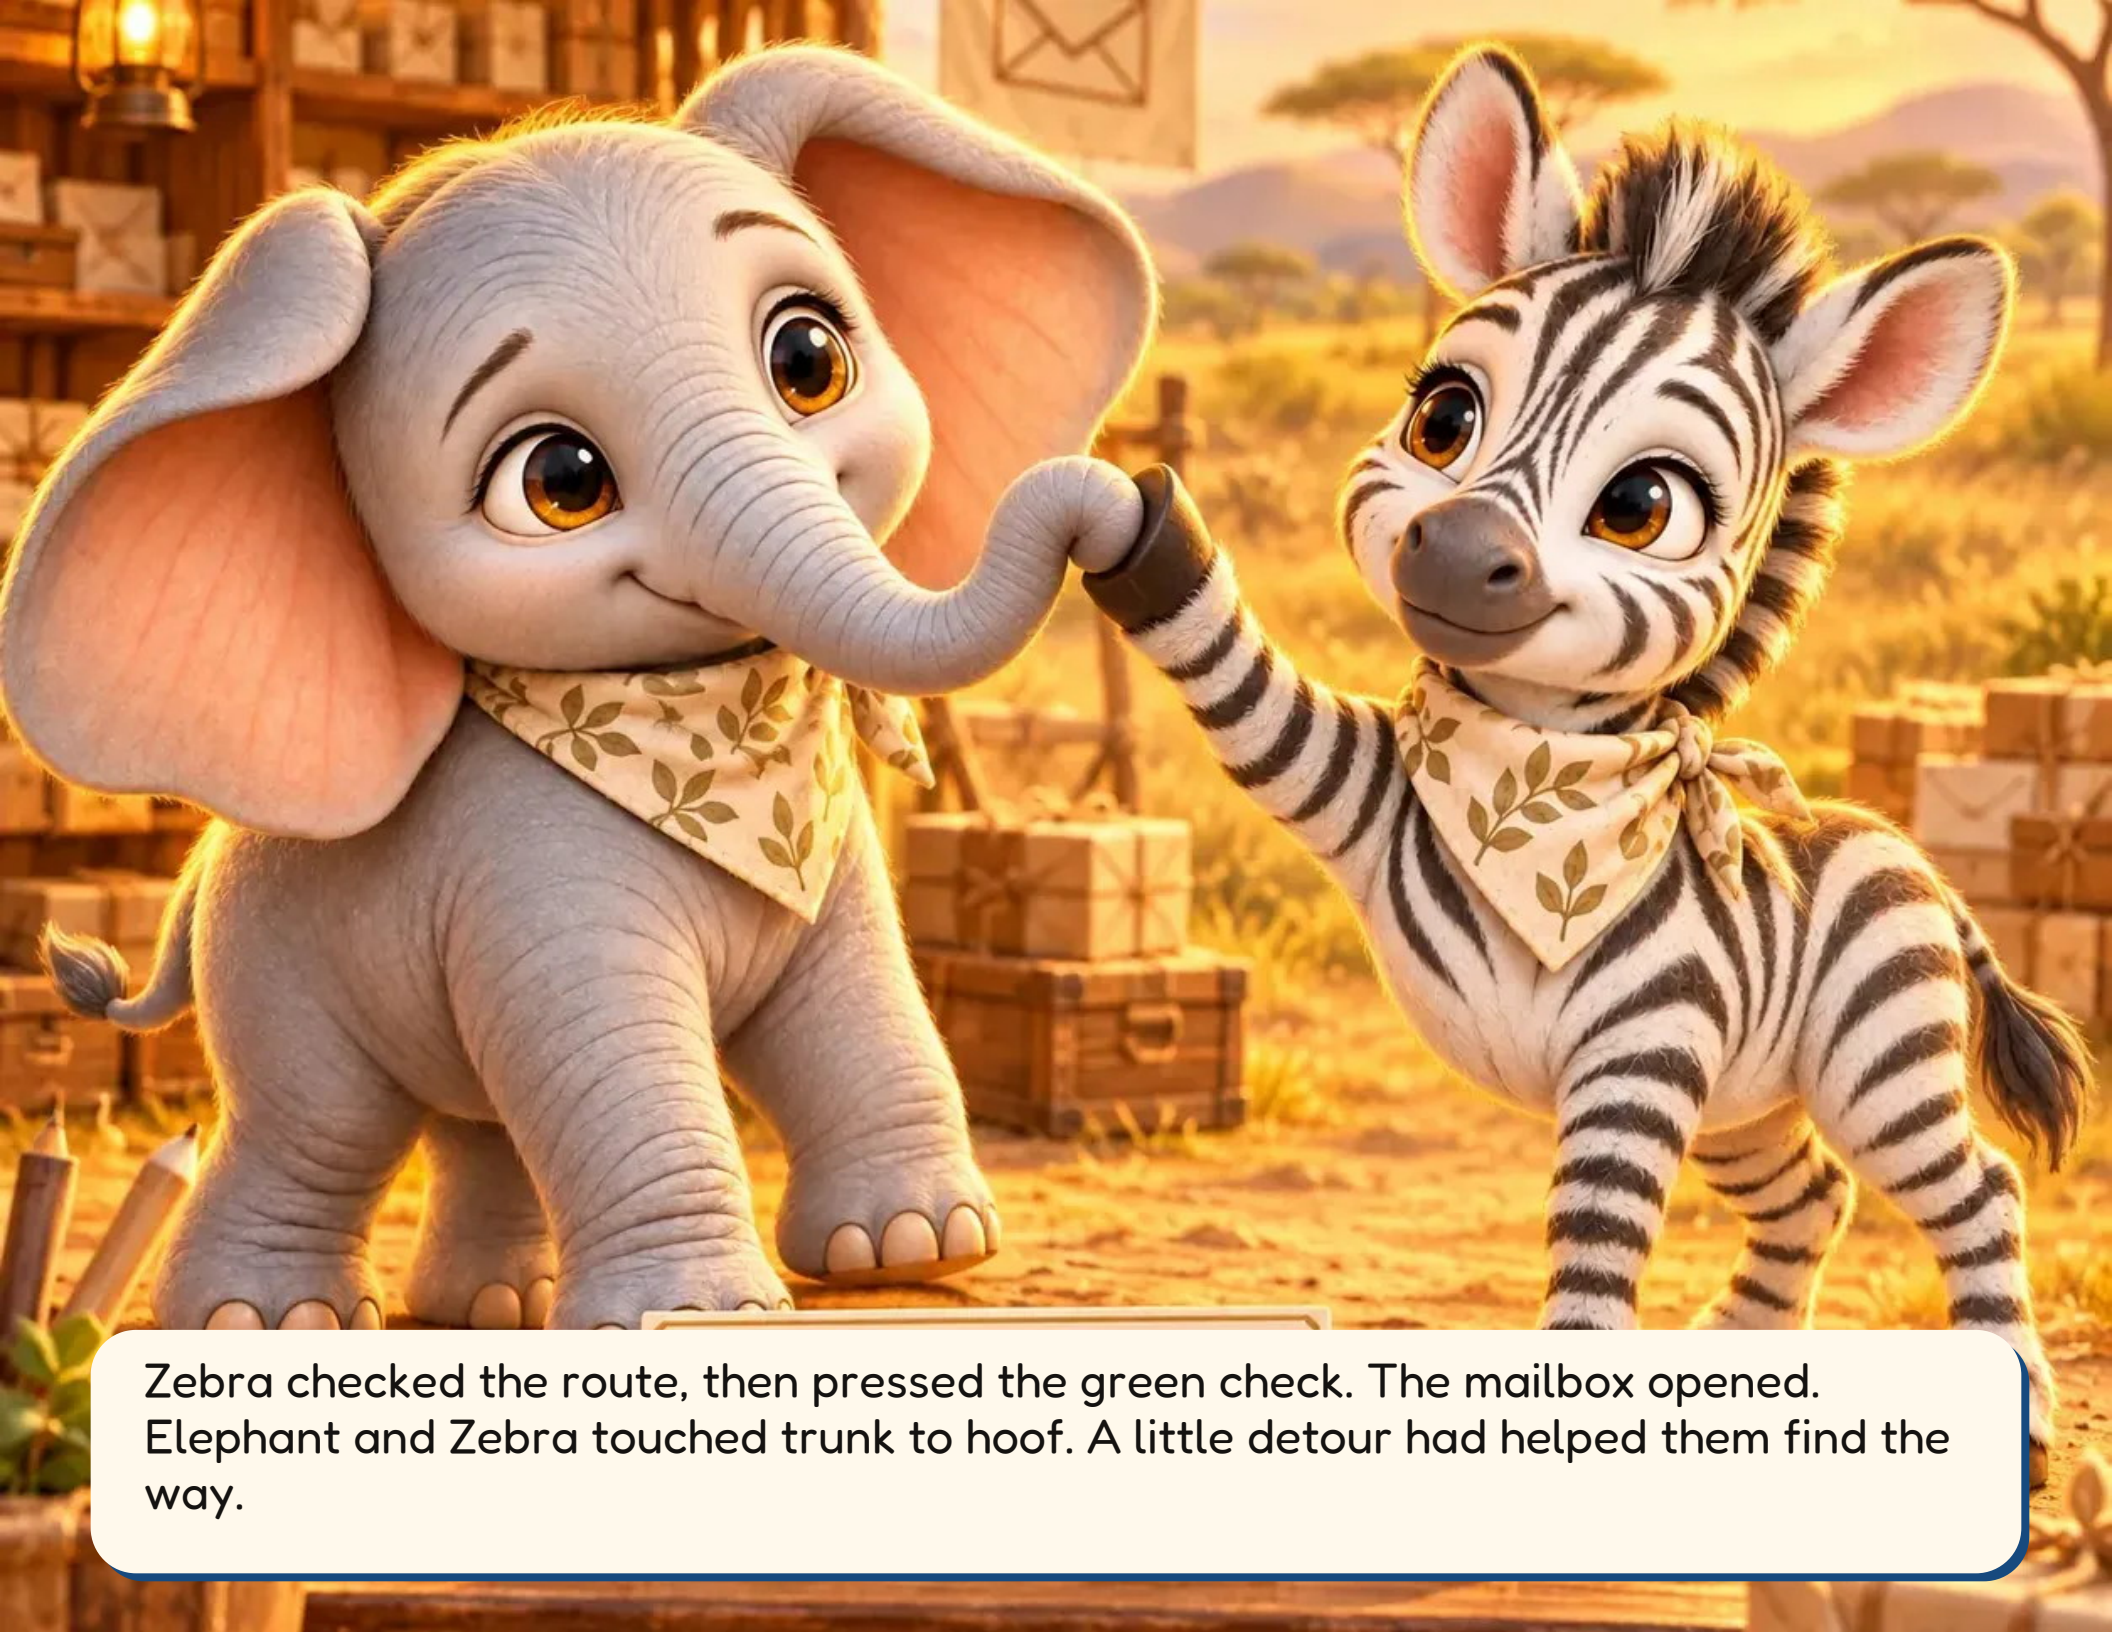
At the savanna post office, Zebra had one important letter. The little mail cart waited at 34. First came a stamp at 44. Then came the mailbox at 45.

Zebra tipped the map to the right. Click! The cart rolled to 35. But the stamp was still below. “I can go back,” Zebra said.

Zebra brought the cart back to 34. Then the map tipped gently down. Click! The cart reached 44. Down one row meant ten more.

At 44, the letter got its golden stamp. Zebra leveled the map. The cart rested in the middle of its square. There was no need to hurry.

One small tip to the right brought the cart to 45. Sideways meant one more. The stamp had been visited. The letter was ready to deliver.



Zebra checked the route, then pressed the green check. The mailbox opened. Elephant and Zebra touched trunk to hoof. A little detour had helped them find the way.
